I see art and wildlife conservation as a symbiotic relationship. Because art keeps alive the memories of wildlife in a natural setting, it stimulates a longing in the public to know that such scenes will continue to exist in nature.

Peter Stewart is a renowned South African wildlife painter who has developed an international reputation for his highly realistic, representational wildlife art. Growing up in South Africa, he became interested in wildlife and the African bush from an early age. Peter has always had a passion for conservation and the african bush and has spent many months traveling and experiencing the continent.

His paintings emote, and convey a care and sensitivity that is only achieved from knowing the subject matter intimately. Utilizing subtle value and temperature shifts, fine draughtsmanship, and pure intuition, Peter weaves a world of breathable air and tactile forms. Peter has been a regular exhibitor at both the DSC and SCI conventions for the past 5 years.
